OLD COPPER MINE.

The copper mines of Santa Pite, ic ented 14 miles east of Silver City, N. M. began the production of copper long before the American prospector had some into being. According to acsounts found in the archives of the City of Mexico, the mines were abandoned by the Spantards in 1789, having been operated by them for many years previous to that date, as is shown by the size of the dumps at the old work

History relates that two Spanish Beutenants. Romero and Charasco, with a number of Mexican peons and some few soldiers, held the mines against the Apache Indians and worked them in spite of their hostlitty.
